- White heart of a land of honor,
- And joy of a people free From the sunshine that fell upon her free soft rains ceased to be,
  God gathered the diamond splendor of a world from sea to sea,
  And poured its effulgence tender in the valley of Aserri.
- Then he took from the skies above it The tenderest tints they wore, To clothe the hills that should love it and guard it forever more; The rarest of sapphire sparkle.

  And azure a wondrous store,

  At d amethyst that should darkle
- like the sea depths far from shore. At d out of the soil, as he willed it. He took of each flower that blows
- The seed of the fairest and spilled it in the valley's fertile close; And he sent the sun and the showers And many a stream that flows To fashion a thousand bowers
- Of jasmine and royal rose. Till never a spot was fairer Than that where the city should be; And never a picture rarer
